Summary

I'm a computer science student with a growing passion for web development and cybersecurity. I began learning Python in grade 10 and am currently learning C++ to strengthen my programming foundation. I enjoy building websites and exploring how to protect systems through ethical hacking and security tools.

My long-term goal is to create secure, intelligent systems that benefit others—especially in education and learning. I'm working hard to earn a scholarship to study at Monash University, while also freelancing to gain real-world experience and support my education.

Whether it's developing a clean front-end interface, writing back-end code, or learning how to defend against cyber threats, I'm always ready to explore, grow, and contribute.

Let's connect if you're interested in tech collaboration, cybersecurity discussions, or freelance web projects!
